The material is not in the form which pilots can readily appreciate. I think this definitely needs a cartoon-type treatment.

I discussed this some time ago with and John assures me that Lockheed has people who are capable of making these kinds of presentations. Don't you think it would be advisable to turn the material over to the appropriate Lockheed people and let them put out some sort of a brochure? I would recommend that this type of procedure be developed for every major piece of equipment in which the pilot is involved in its operation.
